

Introduction to the Special Issue: COVID-19 in Economics and Finance

The pandemic SARS-CoV-2 coronavirus that causes the COVID-19 disease has seen the most significant change in the world economy over the past century, destabilizing the lives of all around the world. The COVID-19 disease has severely affected tourism, travel, hospitality, supply chains, consumption, production, operations, valuations, security, financial stress and the prices of all products, among others. This has had unimagined impacts on the world's business, risk, financial management and financial markets.

The Japanese Journal of Monetary and Financial Economics (JJMFE) will publish a special issue titled "COVID-19 in Economics and Finance". The Special Issue will foster and promote state-of-the-art research on any issues related to the COVID-19 in economics and finance.
